

THE SOURCE!

HIGH WATER MARK Olvia Demetriou lounges in her luxe loo for a recent Washington Design House project.

ALL IN! For Adamstein & Demetriou's recent overhaul of The Dupont Hotel, firm president Olvia Demetriou (ad-architects.com) wrapped the lobby walls and furnishings with sumptuous Maharam textiles (maharam.com). "Their elegant sheen and subtlety of texture and color add a timeless, rich quality," says the Cooper Union alum. Fresh from completing a much-buzzed-about DC manse for art collectors Tony and Heather Podesta, A&D will tackle a new resto-lounge at 14th and U, a renovation of José Andrés' Oyamel and a revamp of Senator Bob Corker's pad with his interior designer wife. "As an architect who does interiors, I strive to inspire and delight, while creating timeless spaces."

A MIGHTY FOUNDATION

DC decorator Tracy Morris (tracymorrisdesign.com) keeps Bethesda's Michael Bruckwick of Katinas Bruckwick Architecture (kbarchitecture.com) on her speed dial. "His ability to see and define structure gives me creative freedom," she says. "We've collaborated on five projects, and together we transform houses." With an eponymous bedding line and a TV pilot in the pipes, this seasoned designer continues to surprise. "Whether it's pairing a Sputnik chandelier with a limed oak table or injecting Luminaire's neoprene chair into a formal living room, I want to breathe life into rooms and give them an unexpected flavor."

TIME OUT CHAIR Tracy Morris' favorite mod accents are Luminaire's Up5 lounge and Up6 ottoman. Its nickname, Ball and Chain, comes from the pieces' seemingly feminine forms.

"Donghia furniture is a chameleon. It can blend into both traditional and contemporary spaces, and often sets the tone of a room."
